3. "Many respectable speakers pronounce this word so as to rhyme with hawl, the noise made by a dog. Dr. Johnson, Mr. Elphinstone, and Mr. Perry declare for it; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Smith pronounce it as the vessel to hold liquor, rhyming with hole. I remember having been corrected by Mr. Garrick for pronouncing it like hawl, and am, upon the whole, of opinion, that pronouncing it as I have marked it is the preferable mode, though the least analogical. But as the vessel has indisputably this sound, it is rendering the language still more irregular to give the ball a different one. The inconvenience of this irregularity is often perceived in the word bow. To have the same word signify different things is the fate of all languages; but pronouncing the same word differently, to signify different things, is multiplying difficulties without necessity." Walker.

Syn.—See EMPLOY.

BUS'Y-BÖD-Y (biz'ze-), n. A meddling person.

BÛT, conj. [A. S. butan, but, unless, except;—the imperative, according to Tooke, of botan, to boot, or to add. Basowith, however, does not give this word botan in his Dictionary; and Jamieson says there is no such A. S. v.]

1. On the other hand, or on the contrary;—noting contrast or opposition.

The memory of the just is blessed; but the name of the wicked shall rot. Prov. x. 7.

2. Yet; still; however; nevertheless.

Now abideth faith, hope, charity—these three; but the greatest of these is charity. 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

3. Except that; if it were not that; if it be not that; unless.

I have done more than that which all my heart, with all my strength, with all my mind, with all my might, I have done. Shak.

4. Otherwise than that; that;—now commonly expressed by the phrase but that.

It cannot be but Nature hath some director of infinite power to guide her in all her ways. Hooker.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame. Dryden.

Lexicographers and grammarians differ much in relation to but. Mr. Todd remarks, "Dr. Johnson considers but only a conjunction, whereas it is, in fact, a conjunction, proposition, adverb, and interjection."—Mr. Smart says, "It is not always a conjunction: it is a preposition where we say, 'I saw no one but him.' Yet we may, by an ellipsis, still explain it as a conjunction: 'I saw no one, but [I saw] him'; or, by another ellipsis, as an adverb: 'I saw no one, [I saw] but him,' that is, 'only him.' The simplest explanation, or that which dispenses with the ellipses, is the best."

Syn.—But, however, yet, still, notwithstanding, nevertheless. But, like its corresponding conjunctions in French, Italian, and Greek, has two distinct meanings—one in a certain sense conjunctive, and the other disjunctive. The one would be expressed at full length by but yet, the other by but on the contrary. For instance, "This is not summer, but it is almost as warm," would express the first; and, "This is not summer, but winter," the second. Horne Tooke was so struck with the difference of these two meanings of but, that he referred the word to two separate roots, one being boot (besides), the other be-out (left out). Ingenious as this theory is, it is hardly tenable; for not only in French and Italian, but even in Greek, there is but one conjunction to express these two different meanings. In German, Spanish, and Latin, we find a conjunction for each of these two meanings; the German aber, the Spanish pero, and the Latin autem, answering to but yet; and sedem, sino, and sed, to but on the contrary.

The other words in the group, all correspond to the first of these two meanings, but yet. The weakest of them all in disjunctive power is however, which seems rather to waive the question than to qualify or alter it. "This, however, is not essential," differs in force from, "But this is not essential"; the latter rather implying that it might be thought essential.

Yet is stronger than but, and still even stronger again, as it indicates an exception to what has been said before. It seems an abbreviation of not removed. "All you say is true; still I think,"—this implies that full weight is given to the opponent's arguments, but that they do not remove the difficulty in the mind of the objector. Notwithstanding and nevertheless are again stronger than still. Nevertheless is the strongest of all. Whately's Synonyms.—See HOWEVER.

BÛT, prep. [A. S. butan, without. Tooke suggests that it is formed from the imperative of beon, to be, and utan, out.] Excepting; except; as, "All but one were lost."

The bow stood on the burning deck,
Where but the flames of fire were red. Hemans.

BY (bi or be) [bi or be, W. Sm.; bi or bý, S. J.; bi, P. F. Ja. K.], prep. [Goth. bi; A. S. be, bi, or big; Dut. & Icel. by; Ger. bei.]

1. Through or with; — denoting the agent, instrument, cause, way, or means; as, "It was done by him"; "A man is killed with a sword, and dies by violence."

2. At or on; as, "By sea and by land."

3. From; as, "To judge of the future by the past."

4. Near to; as, "To sail by a place"; "To sit by the side of another"; "To keep any thing by one"; "North by west."

5. In possession of; as, "How did you come by it?"

In many phrases it denotes other relations, for which it is difficult to substitute any other single word as a definition. Thus, by one's self, by itself, &c., note separation from other persons or things; — one by one, day by day, &c., particulars considered separately; — by the pound, by the piece, &c., quantity or measure; — by name, specification; — by this time, by that time, &c., when this or that time had arrived. In forms of swearing it is used before the object invoked; as, "Neither shalt thou swear by thy head." Matt. v. 36.

When pronounced distinctly, or with the accent, as when it is used in composition, it is pronounced bi. Walker says, "The general sound of this word is like the verb to buy; but we not unrequently hear it pronounced like the verb to be. This latter sound, however, is tolerable only in colloquial pronunciation, and then only when used as a preposition; as when we say, 'Do you travel by land or by water?' But, in reading these lines of Pope, —

"By land, by water, they renew the charge,

They stop the chariot, and they board the barge" — here we ought to give the word by the sound of the verb to buy; so that pronouncing this word like be is, if the word will be pardoned me, a colloquialism."

Bÿ (bi), ad. 1. Being, or passing, near; as, "To stand by"; "To go, or come, by."

2. In presence. "There was no other body by." Sidney.

† Bÿ, v. a. To suffer for. — See ABÿ. Sackville.

Bÿ- (in composition) implies something out of the direct way; irregular; collateral; private; or retired; as, "A by place," "A by-corner." — It is sometime used without the hyphen; as, "A by place"; "A by road."

Bÿ, or BÿE, n. Something not the direct and immediate object of regard. "They who have saluted her [Poetry] on the by." B. Jonson. "The Pervigilium Veneris (which, by the bye, does not belong to Catullus) is very well versified." Goldsmith.

By the bye. In this expression, the latter bye seems to be the same bye as in by-law, &c., and of course to admit a similar explanation. In Lord Bacon, "There is upon the bye to be noted," i. e. upon the way, in passing, indirectly. "You are fools, you mean to take away the king and his cube." Shakspeare, Twelfth Night, James I., 1603. "By the bye, then, is by the way, in passing, such being a collateral, not main, object." Richardson.

Bÿ AND Bÿ (bi'and-bi), ad. In a short time; presently; before long. Sidney.

I will that thou give me, by and by, in a charger, the head of John the Baptist. Mark vi. 26.

No attempt has yet been made to account for this phrase. Richardson.

BÿZ'AN-TĪNE, a. Belonging to Byzantium.
BÿZ'AN-TĪNE, n. See BIZANTINE, and BEZANT.

C.

C, the third letter of the alphabet, is a consonant, and has two sounds, one hard, like k, before a, o, u, l, r, and t; the other soft, like s, before e, i, and y: — combined with the letter h, it has three different sounds: the first, its proper English sound, nearly equivalent to tsh, as in church; the second, in words from the French, equivalent to sh, as in chaise; the third, in words from the Greek, equivalent to k, as in chorā. — C, as a numeral letter, denotes a hundred. — In music, it represents the key-note of the major, and the third of the minor natural scale; and placed after the clef, it is the sign of common time, and that each bar is equal to a semibreve in duration.

CĀB, n. [כַּבֵּי.] A Hebrew measure, of about three pints. Calmet.

CĀB, n. 1. A kind of chaise, or carriage, with two or four wheels, drawn by one horse; — so used as an abbreviation of cabriolet. W. Ency.
2. A small structure on a locomotive engine serving as a shelter to the engineer. Rice.

CA-BĀL', n. [Fr. cabale.] A small body of men, united to effect some party or sinister purpose; a junto; a set: — a plot, — used in a bad sense.

The judges being all of the same cabal. Theophania, 1855.
We use to say, He is not received into our cabal; that is, He is not received into our council, or is not privy to our secrets. Dionys's Geographia (8d ed., 1670).

Lord Clifford was made lord treasurer, Lord Arlington and Lord Lauderdale had both of them the cabal; and as Arlington was made an earl, Lauderdale was made a duke, and this junto, together with the Duke of Buckingham, being called the cabal, it was observed that cabal proved a technical word, every letter in it being the first letter of those five — Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale. Burnet's Own Times.

"The word cabal [a junto] appears to come from the French cabale." P. Cyc. It has been stated, by some authors, that this word was formed from the first letters of the names of the five ministers of Charles II.; but the word was in use, with a somewhat similar meaning, before the formation of that ministry, which, according to Hume, was formed in 1670. The word was doubtless originally derived from the Hebrew: but it now differs widely in meaning from the Hebrew word cabal, which, in the Dictionaries of Dyché and Barclay, has the accent on the first syllable; yet all the principal English Pronouncing Dictionaries pronounce both words, or the same word in different senses, with the accent on the second syllable. In Hudibras, the two words are differently accented.

Syn. — See FACTION.

CA-BĀL', v. n. [Fr. cabaler.] [é. CABALLED; pp. CABALLING, CABALLED.] To form plots; to plot; to intrigue; to conspire.

CÄL'CA-VÄL'LÄ, n. A superior kind of Lisbon wine. Todd.

CÄL'CE-ÄT-ED [kä'se-ät-ed, S. K. Sm.; kä'she-ät-ed, W. P. Ja.], a. [L. calceatus; calc, the heel.] Fitted with shoes; shod. Johnson.

CÄL'CE-DON, n. A foul vein, like chalcedony, in some precious stones. Buchanan.

CÄL'CE-DÖ-NY, n. See CHALCEDONY.

CÄL'CE-I-FÖRM, a. [L. calceus, a shoe, and forma, form.] (Bot.) Formed like a little shoe, as the corolla of Calceolaria. Gray.

CÄL'CE-Q-LÄ'Rİ-A, n. [L. calceus, a shoe.] (Bot.) A genus of beautiful herbaceous or shrubby plants, most of which bear yellow flowers; slipper-wort; — so named from the shape of the corolla. Loudon.

CAL'CĒS, n. pl. [L. calx, calcis, lime or chalk.] (Chem.) Products of combustion, especially those obtained from the metals, which were supposed by the alchemists to be converted into a species of gold. — See CALX. Brande.

CAL'CĪFER-OŪS, a. [L. calx, lime or chalk, and fero, to bear.] Containing lime. Smart.

CAL'CĪ-FŌRM, a. [L. calx, lime or chalk, and forma, form.] Being in the form of chalk or lime. Smart.

CAL'CĪ-NA-BLE, or CAL'CĪ-NA-BLE [kāl'sē-nā-bl, Ja. K. R. Cl.; kāl-sī'nā-bl, Sm. C.; kāl-sī'nā-bl, Wb.], a. That may be calcined. "Imperfectly calcinable in a great fire." Hill.

CAL'CĪ-NĀTE, v. a. See CALCINE. [r.] Bacon.

CAL'CĪ-NĀTION, n. [Fr. calcination.] (Chem.) 1. The process of calcining; the reduction of substances to cinder or ashes.

2. The separation of the volatile from the more fixed parts of a body by heat. Turner.

CAL'CĪN'A-TŌ-RY [kāl-sī'nā-tū-ē, W. P. Ja. K. Sm. C.; kāl'sīnā-tūr-ē, S.], n. A vessel used in calcination. Johnson.

CAL'CĪNE [kāl-sīn', S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm.; kāl'sīn', Wb.], v. a. [L. calx, lime or chalk; Fr. calciner.] [i. CALCINED; pp. CALCINING, CALCINED.]

1. (Chem.) To expel all volatile ingredients from a compound by heat, as water and carbonic acid from carbonate of lime or limestone in the manufacture of lime; to reduce to powder or ashes.

2. To convert metals into calces or metallic oxides by heat; to oxidize. Ure.

CAL'CĪNE, v. n. To become a powder or calx, or be pulverized by heat; to become an oxide. This crystal is a pellucid stone, . . . in a very strong heat calcining without fusion. Newton.

CAL'CĪTE, n. [L. calx, calcis, lime.] (Min.) A name applied to a large variety of compounds of carbonic acid and lime, as chalk, marble, Iceland spar, &c. Dana.

CAL'CĪ-TRĀTION, n. Act of kicking. Ed. Rev.

CAL'CĪ-ŪM (kāl'sē-ūm), n. (Chem.) The metallic base of lime. Brande.

CAL-CŌ-GRĀPII-I-CAL, a. Relating to calcography. Craig.

CAL-CŌG-RA-PHY, n. [L. calx, lime or chalk, and Gr. γραφω, to delineate.] The art of engraving in chalk. — See CHALCOGRAPHY. Clarke.

CALC-SĪN'TER, n. [Ger. kalk, lime, and sintern, to drop.] (Geol.) A deposit from springs holding carbonate of lime in solution. Lyell.

CALC'-SPĀR, n. (Min.) Calcareous spar, or crystallized carbonate of lime. Brande.

CALC'-TUFF, n. (Chem.) An irregular porous deposit of the carbonate of lime, formed from the waters of calcareous springs. Ure.

CAL'CU-LĀ-BLE, a. That may be computed.

CAL'CU-LĀ-RY, a. [L. calculus, pebble.] (Med.) Relating to the disease of the stone. Smart.

CAL'CU-LĀ-RY, n. A congeries of little stony knots in the pear and other fruits formed by concretions of the sap. Craab.

CAL'CU-LĀTE, v. a. [L. calculo, calculatus; calculus, a pebble; It. calcolare; Sp. calcular; Fr. calculer.] [v. CALCULATED; pp. CALCULATING, CALCULATED.]

1. To ascertain by computation; to compute; to reckon; to estimate.

He calculates his expenses. Johnson.

2. To compute as an astronomer or an astrologer; as, "To calculate eclipses or nativities."

3. To adjust or adapt to some end; to fit. Religion is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Willson.

CAL'CU-LĀTE, v. n. To make a computation; to cast accounts. Shak.

Calculating machine, a machine invented by Charles Babbage, which accomplishes the addition of numbers by the movements of a series of cylinders.

Syn. — Calculate is a more generic term than compute, reckon, or count. Calculate, reckon, and count respect mostly the future; compute, the past. The astronomer, geometer, the mathematician, and statesman calculate; the chronologist computes; the accountant reckons. Calculate an eclipse, compute the time, compute or reckon the profit and loss, count or number the minutes or the stars.

Et. — This word is often improperly used in the U. S., in the sense of to expect, think, or intend, as, "I calculate to leave town to-morrow." Pickering.

CAL'CU-LĀTION, n. 1. The art, or the act, of reckoning or calculating; computation.

2. The result of arithmetical operation; a reckoning.

If then their calculation be true; for so they reckon. Hooker. Whenever we speak of arithmetic as the science of calculation, we mean that it is a science of calculation, and not of calculation. Trench.

CAL'CU-LĀ-TIVE, a. Belonging to calculation. "Habits of calculative dealings." Burke.

CAL'CU-LĀ-TŌR, n. One who calculates; a reckoner; an accountant; a computist.

CAL'CU-LĀ-TŌ-RY, a. Belonging to calculation; calculative. Sherwood.

CAL-CŪ-LŌSE, a. Same as CALCULOUS. Browne.

CAL-CŪ-LOŪS, a. Stony; gritty. Sharp.

CAL-CŪ-LŪS, n. [pl. CAL-CŪ-LĪ.] [L., a pebble.]

1. (Med.) A morbid concretion that may form in any part of the body, but generally found in the reservoirs or ducts. Dunglison.

2. (Math.) [Eng. pl. CALCULUSES.] A method of computation. — See DIFFERENTIAL CALCULUS. Davies & Peck.

CAL'DRON, n. [L. caldarium; Old Fr. chaudron; Fr. chaudron.] A boiler; a large kettle.

CA-LECHE (kā-lāsh'), n. [Fr. a light, low-wheeled carriage. — See CALASH. Butler.

CAL-E-DŌ'NI-AN, a. [Caledonia, the ancient name of Scotland.] (Geog.) Scottish.

CAL-E-DŌ'NI-AN, n. (Geog.) A Scotchman.

CAL'E-DŌN-ITE, n. (Min.) A mineral composed of sulphate of lead, carbonate of lead, and carbonate of copper. Dana.

CAL-E-FĀ'CIENT (kāl-ē-fā'shent), a. [L. calefaciens.] Making warm or hot. [r.] Maunder.

CAL-E-FĀ'CIENT, n. (Med.) A warming stimulant. Dunglison.

CAL-E-FĀC'TION, n. [L. calefactio.]

1. Act of heating. Spenser.

2. State of being heated. Johnson.

CAL-E-FĀC'TIVE, a. That makes hot; calefactory. [r.] Johnson.

CAL-E-FĀC'TŌR, n. A small kind of stove. Tozer.

CAL-E-FĀC'TŌ-RY, a. [L. calefacio, calefactus, to make warm.] That makes hot; causing heat; calefactory. Johnson.

CAL-E-FĀC'TŌ-RY, n. A warming-room in a monastery. Ash.

CAL-E-FY, v. n. [L. calefo.] To grow hot; to be heated. [r.] Browne.

CAL-E-FY, v. a. To make warm. [r.] Bullockar.

CAL'EN-DAR, n. [L. calendar, the first days of the Roman months; calendarium, an account book; Fr. calendrier.]

1. A recorded division of time into periods adapted to the purposes of civil life; a tabular statement of the chronological epochs of any year; a register of the year; an almanac; an ephemeris.

2. A list, as of cases to be tried in a court, or of bills in Congress.

Calendar month, a solar month as it stands in the almanac.

Syn. — The words calendar, almanac, and ephemeris are all used to denote date-books for the current year. Almanac is properly the divider of time by the year, calendar by the month, and ephemeris by the day. A common almanac is an annual register, with a calendar, in which the days of the week and month, religious feasts and holidays, the tides, the variations between true and solar time, &c., are noted. An ephemeris is a more minute chronicle of time than an almanac, and it describes the daily variations of the celestial and terrestrial phenomena, particularly for the purposes of navigation and astronomy. A nautical almanac has a very complete astronomical ephemeris, with a copious list of astronomical phenomena at sea, and it is designed for the use of navigation.

CAL'EN-DAR, v. a. To enter in a calendar; to register. Whitlock.

CAL'EN-DER, v. a. [L. caleo, to be hot; Sp. calentar; Port. calandrar; Fr. calandrier.] [i. CALENDERED; pp. CALENDERING, CALENDERED.] To dress smooth, and glaze cloth in a calendar, or by hot pressing. Ure.

CAL'EN-DER, n. [Dut. klanderaar; Port. calandra; Fr. calandrie.]

1. A hot press, or machine for pressing and smoothing cloth. Johnson.

1. (Gunnery.) The internal diameter or bore of a gun, or any piece of ordnance.

2. The diameter of a bullet, or of any round substance.

3. Compass or capacity of mind. Burke.

Mr. Smart says, "In this figurative sense, usage has not yet Anglicized the word; and calibre, the original French form, is generally used when we apply the word figuratively; as in saying, 'A mind of inferior calibre?'"; and, in this sense, both Smart and Jamieson pronounce it ka-lî-bur.

Mr. Sheridan accents this word on the second syllable, and gives the sound of double e, like the French, but Johnson, Kenrick, Ash, Buchanan, Perry, and Entick consider the word as perfectly Anglicized, and place the accent on the first syllable, as I have done." Walker.

CÁL-I-BÔ-GUS, n. A beverage of rum and spruce beer. [Cant term, U. S.] Bartlett.

CÁL/ICE (kál'is), n. [L. calix; Fr. calice; A. S. calic.] A cup.—See CHALICE. Taylor.

CÁL/I-CÔ, n.; pl. CALICOES. [Fr., from Calicut, in India.] A printed cotton cloth or fabric, coarser than muslin;—originally applied to white cotton cloth from India.

Such has been the manufacturing progress of England, that we now send our calicoes and muslins to India and the East, yet the words give standing witness that we once imported them thence, for calico is from Calicut, and muslin from Mosul. Trench.

CÄR, or CHÄR, in the names of places, seem to have relation to the British caer, a city. Gibson.

CÄR'A-BINE (kär'a-bin, Ja. R.; kär'a-bin, K.; kär'in', S. W. P.), n. [It. & Sp. carabina; Fr. carabine.] A fire-arm used by cavalry; a petronel; a small sort of fire-arm between a pistol and a musket;—written also carbène.

Dr. Ash, Bailey, W. Johnston, Entick, and Buchanan accent carabine on the last syllable, and Dr. Johnson and Mr. Perry on the first; while Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Buchanan, Dr. Johnson, and Bailey accent carbine on the first; but Mr. Scott, Entick, Perry, and Kenrick more properly on the last. The reason is, that if we accent carbine on the last syllable, the last ought, according to analogy, to have the short; but as the i is always long, the accent ought to be on the last syllable. Walker.

CÄR-A-BI-NÉER, n. [Fr. carabinier.] A sort of light horseman; one armed with a carbine;—written also carbinee. Chambers.

CÄR'A-BÖID, a. [Gr. κάραβος, a kind of beetle, and áidos, form.] Relating to the carabus. Smart.

CAR-BŌ-NĀ'RI, n. pl. [It., colliers.] The name of a secret political society of radical reformers in Italy. Ency.

CAR-BŌN-ATE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed by the union of carbonic acid with a base. Brande.

Carbonate of ammonia, smelling salts.

CAR-BŌN-ĀT-ED, a. Containing carbonic acid gas. "Carbonated springs." Lyell.

CAR-BŌN'IC, a. Relating to, or consisting of, carbon.

Corb contains more of the carbonic principle than grasses. Kirwan.

CAR-BŌN'IC-ĀC'ID, n. An acid composed of one equivalent of carbon and two equivalents of oxygen. When uncombined, it exists in the form of a gas, but may be reduced to a liquid under a pressure of thirty-six atmospheres, and even to a solid form, like snow, by the intense cold consequent on the rapidity of its evaporation from the liquid state. It is a constant product of combustion and of respiration, and, when unmixed with atmospheric air, extinguishes flame and suffocates animals. From this circumstance miners call it choke-damp. It was formerly also called fixed air, mephitic air, and mephitic gas. Brande.

CAR-BŌN'IC-ŌX'IDE, n. (Chem.) A compound of one equivalent of carbon and one of oxygen. It burns with a pale-blue flame, as in the combustion of charcoal, anthracite coal, &c., and when respired is quickly fatal to animal life. Turner.

CAR-BŌ-NĪF'ER-ŌUS, a. [L. carbo, coal, and fero, to bear.] Containing carbon or coal.

Carboniferous group, (Geol.) a group of secondary strata, comprising three divisions: the coal measures, millstone grit, and mountain limestone. Lyell.

CAR-BŌN-I-ZĀ'TION, n. The act of carbonizing; the process of changing into carbon. Ure.

CAR-BŌN-IZE, v. a. [i. CARBONIZED; pp. CARBONIZING, CARBONIZED.] To convert into carbon by partial burning, without access of air, or by the action of acids. Loudon.

CAR-BŌ-NŌ-HY'DROUS, a. [Eng. carbon, and Gr. hōp, water.] (Chem.) Composed of carbon and hydrogen. Ure.

CAR-BŌ-SŪL'PHŪ-RĒT, n. (Chem.) A compound of bi-sulphuret of carbon (also called sulphide of carbon and sulpho-carbonic acid) and a base; as, "Carbo-sulphuret of potassium." Ogilvie.

CAR-BŪY, n. A large, globular bottle of green glass protected by basket-work. Brande.

CAR-BŪN-CLE (kār'būngk-kle), n. [L. carbunculus, a little coal; Sp. carbunclo; Fr. carbuncle.] 1. An ancient name of a gem or precious stone of a deep red color, supposed to be the precious garnet.

It is believed that a carbuncle does shine in the dark like a burning coal: from whence it hath its name. Willms. 2. (Med.) A hard, round, inflammatory tumor which discharges a fetid matter, differing from the common boil in having no central core; a malignant boil; a species of anthrax. Dunglison.

CAR-BŪN-CLED (kār'būngk-kle), a. 1. Set with the gems called carbuncles. Shak. 2. (Med.) Afflicted with carbuncles. Johnson.

CAR-BŪN-CŪ-LAR, a. Like a carbuncle; inflamed. Johnson.

CAR-BŪN-CŪ-LĀ'TION, [L. carbunculation.] The blasting of young buds of trees by excessive heat or cold. Harris.

CAR-BŪ-RĒT, n. (Chem.) A compound of carbon and a base. "Carburet of iron." Turner.

CAR-BŪ-RĒT-TED, a. Combined with, or containing, carbon. "Carburetted hydrogen." Brande.

Carburetted hydrogen, (Chem.) a name applied to compounds of carbon and hydrogen, some of which are gaseous, as oil gas, coal gas, olefiant gas; some are liquid, as naphtha and oil of turpentine; and others are solid, as caoutchouc. Ure.

CAR-Ā-JŌU, n. [Fr.] A species of lynx found in Canada and other parts of North America. Doiste.

CAR-Ā-NĒT, n. [Fr. carcan.] A chain or collar of jewels; a necklace or bracelet. Shak.

† CAR-Ā-SE, n. A dead body; a carcass. Bible.

CAR-CASS, n. 1. [Low L. carcasium; It. carcassa; Fr. carcasse.] A dead body of any animal; a corpse. Now scattered lies

With carcasses and arms the ensanguined field. Milton.

The categories laid down by Aristotle are ten: — substance, quantity, quality, relation, place, time, situation, possession, action, and suffering. All these may be arranged under two grand heads — substance and attribute.

The categories of Aristotle are both logical and metaphysical, and apply to things as well as to words. Regarded logically, they are reducible to two, substance and attribute; regarded metaphysically, they are reducible to being and accident. The categories of Kant are quantity, quality, relation, and modality. Fleming.

Syn. — In popular language, category is used in an indifferent sense; predicament, often in an ill sense. One may be said to be in the same category or the same predicament, in a dangerous or awkward predicament, but not in an awkward category.

Chamber of commerce, a society of merchants and traders.

"I have, in this word, departed from Mr. Sheridan and Dr. Kenrick, because I think the best usage has entirely departed from them. About thirty years ago [i. e. about 1770], the first syllable of chamber was universally pronounced so as to rhyme with palm, psalm, &c.; but since that time it has been gradually narrowing to the slender sound of a in came, fame, &c., and seems now to be fully established in this sound. This, however, is to be regretted, as it militates with the laws of syllabification. There are few words in the language which we cannot so divide into parts as to show by this division the quantity of the vowels: this word forms an exception; for mb being uncombining consonants, we cannot end the first syllable with a; and if we join m to it, the a becomes short, and requires another sound. But if two such words as Cam and bridge could not resist the blind force of custom, which has for so many years reduced them to Camebridge, why should we wonder that chamber and cambridge . . . should yield to the same unrelenting tyrant?" Walker.

1. Absence of an assignable cause; absence of design; accident; fortuity; fortune.

Time and chance happeneth to them all. Ecc. ix. 11. — The theory of chance is of these outward things, which are not under the dominion of the will, but of the decrees of God. Ihu. — There must be chance in the order of design, by which we are brought to the end of our journey. Locke.

The opposites of apparent chance are constancy and sensible interposition. Paley.

A lucky chance that oft decides the fate Of mighty monarchs. Thomson.

2. Risk; hazard; as, "To take the chance of good or ill."

3. Unlucky accident; casualty; misfortune. Common chances common men could bear. Shak.

The theory or doctrine of chances, (Math.) is a branch of analysis which treats of the probability of future events.

Syn. — Accident is applied to things past; chance, commonly to things future. Killed or wounded by accident; met by accident or chance; chance of escape; chance or probability of success; hazard of loss; favored by fortune; chance of gain or loss. Take your chance; run your risk; try your luck. — See ACCIDENT, LUCK.

CHANCE, a. Happening by chance; fortuitous. "Chance companions." Dryden.

CHANCE, ad. By chance; perchance. If chance by lonely contemplation led. Gray.

CHANCE, v. n. [i. CHANGED; pp. CHANCING, CHANCED.] To occur accidentally or unexpectedly; to happen.

Cason, tell us what hath chanced to-day. Shak.

† CHANCE/A-BLE, a. Accidental. Sidney.

† CHANCE/A-BLY, ad. By chance. Sidney.

CHANCE/CÔM-ER, n. One who comes unexpectedly. Addison.

† CHANCE/FÛL, a. Hazardous. Spenser.

CHANCE/CEL, n. [Gr. kyklis, a lattice; L. chanceli, a railing; Ger. kanzel; It. cancello, a balustrade; Sp. cancel, a screen; Fr. chancel, or chancelier.] The eastern part of a church, in which the altar or communion table is placed; — generally divided from the rest by a screen or railing.

CHANCE/CEL-LOR, n. [L. cancellarius; It. cancelliere; Sp. canciller; Fr. chancelier.] — Some derive this word from L. cancelli, in the sense of lattices, or the gratings behind which notaries or scribes sat: others think the allusion is to cancelli, in the sense of the marks by which erasures were made in writings, or by which any thing was cancelled. (Law.) A high judicial officer, presiding over a court of chancery or other court.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court. But this name is greatly advanced, and is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property, for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowell.

The lord high chancellor of England presides in the courts of equity or chancery, and is the keeper of the great seal. — The chancellor of the exchequer presides in the court of exchequer, and takes care of the interest of the crown; and he is the highest officer of finance in the British government. — The chancellor of New York presides in the court of chancery. — A chancellor of a bishopric or a diocese is one appointed to hold the bishop's courts, and assist him in matters of ecclesiastical law. Burill. — A chancellor of a university is an officer who is at the head of the corporate bodies by whom he is elected, and who exercises exclusive jurisdiction in all civil actions where a member of the university or a privileged person is one of the parties, except in cases relating to freehold. Brande.

CHANCE/CEL-LOR-SHIP, n. The office of chancellor. "His chancellorship of England." Camden.

CHANCE/CEL-TA'BLE, n. The communion-table in a church. Milton.

CHANCE-MED'LEY, n. [chance and medley. — Fr. chance, accident, and medley, a quarrel. — See CHAUD-MEDLEY.] (Law.) The law of chance is a lawful act, or a homicide committed in the heat of malice and while acting in self-defence, as in the sudden encounter of a riot; — distinguished from chaud-medley. Burill.

CHANCE/CER-Y, n. [Low L. cancellaria; It. cancellaria; Sp. chancilleria; Fr. chancellerie.] (Law.)

1. A high court of equity; a court in which equity is either exclusively or chiefly administered; — usually termed court of chancery or court of equity. Burill.

2. Equity or proceedings in equity. Burill.

There are five superior courts of chancery in England, viz.: the high court of chancery (the highest court in the kingdom next to the parliament), presided over by the lord high chancellor, to whom an appeal lies from the others; the court of the master of the rolls, who is assistant to the lord chancellor, when present, and his deputy when absent; the court of the vice-chancellor, and two courts of the two additional vice-chancellors recently appointed.

In the United States, equity powers are exercised by distinct and independent tribunals in some of the states (as in Delaware, Virginia, South Carolina, Alabama, and Mississippi); but in most of them, the jurisdiction of law and equity is vested in the same tribunal, though exercised by a different course of procedure. Burill.

CHANCE/CRE (shangk'er, 82), n. [Fr. chancre; Ger. schanker. — See CANKER.] (Med.) An ulcer, usually arising from venereal virus. Wiseman.

CHANGE, v. a. [L. cambio, to exchange; It. cangiare; Fr. changer.] [i. CHANGED; pp. CHANGING, CHANGED.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that . . . took into his own estate had need choose well what he should give, and change them often. Bacon.

2. To give and take reciprocally; to exchange; to barter.

Thou shalt not give him whom thou wouldst not change thy fortune with. De. Taylor.

3. To make different; to alter; to vary. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Jer. xiii. 23.

4. To give money of one kind for money of another kind, or money of a smaller denomination for money of a greater denomination, the value being equal.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea. Swift.

"This word, with others of the same form, such as range, strange, menage, &c., are, in the West of England, pronounced with the short sound of a in ran, man, &c. The same may be observed of the a in the first syllable of angel, ancient, &c., which in that part of the kingdom sounds like the article an; and thus, though disagreeable to a London ear, and contrary to the best usage, which forms the only rule, is more analogous than pronouncing them as if written change, strange, ancient, angel, &c.; for we find every other vowel in this situation short, as revenge, hunge, sponge, &c." Walker — The same pronunciation of these words is not uncommon in some parts of the United States; but it does not appear to be supported by any of the English orthoepists.

Syn. — We change one thing for another; we alter that which does not suit us, and vary the fashion according to circumstances. A man changes his clothes when he puts on others; a tailor alters clothes that do not fit, and varies the fashion of making them.

A sovereign or president changes his ministers; a government exchanges prisoners of war; the punishment of death is commuted to imprisonment for life; one man is substituted for another in office; articles of merchandise are exchanged or bartered; compliments and civilities are interchanged. — See ALTER.

CHANGE, n. 1. An alteration in the state of any thing; variation; mutation.

Since I saw you last There is a change upon you. Shak.

2. A succession of one thing in place of another; vicissitude; variety.

Nothing can cure this part of ill breeding but change and variety of company. Locke.

3. That which produces variety, by alteration in the terms of a series, or by substitution of one thing for another of the same kind.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing. Holder. I will put forth a riddle unto you; if ye can . . . find it out, I will give you . . . thirty changes of garments. Judg. xiv. 12.

4. Money of a small denomination that may be exchanged for an equivalent value of a larger denomination; small money.

Thence the present want of change arises. Swift.

5. (Com.) A place where merchants meet for business; — contracted from Exchange.

Syn. — Change of circumstances or condition, of purpose or opinion; change or revolution in a government; variation of temperature or of the compass, alteration of a garment, vicissitude of human affairs, commutation of punishment, variety of colors or of amusements.

CHANGE-A-BIL'I-TY, n. The quality of being changeable; changeableness. Ed. Ency.

CHAP (chōp), n. [A. S. ceaplas, cheeks.] The upper or the under part of a beast's mouth. Greiv.

"The etymology of this word," says Walker, "will not suffer us to write it chap, and universal usage will not permit us to pronounce it chap; so that it must be classed among those words the pronunciation and orthography of which must ever be at variance." But Smart says, "In chap, chaps (the jaw or jaws), the broad sound [chōp] is a confirmed irregularity. In the verb to chap, to break into cliffs, and the substantive, a chap, derived from it, the irregularity has for some time been less prevalent; and a speaker may pronounce them regularly without seeming pedantic."

The verbs to chap, to break into cliffs or openings, and to chap, to cut, though derived from the same word, are now by many, if not by most speakers, pronounced differently, and commonly spelt differently.

CHĀP, v. n. [A. S. ceapian.] To cheapen; to bargain. Todd.

CHĀP, n. 1. A cheapener; a bargainer; a dealer; chapman;—an abbreviation of chapman.

"The word in this sense is still in use," says Todd, "among the common people. If the phrase be 'a good chap,' it implies a dealer to whom credit may be given; if simply 'a chap,' it usually designates a person of whom a contemptuous opinion is entertained."

CHÄP'WOM-AN (chäp'wôm-an), n. A woman who buys and sells. Massinger.

CHÄR, n. ["Some derive it from A. S. cyran, to turn, because this fish turneth itself swiftly in the water." Todd.] A small delicate fish of the salmon or trout kind. Gray.

CHÄR, v. a. [A. S. cyran, to turn, Tooke; Rus. jaryu, or charyu, to roast or burn, Webster.] [i. CHARRER; pp. CHARRING, CHARRER.]

1. To burn wood to a black cinder; to burn partially. Woodward.

2. To hew, or work, as stone. Francis.

CHÄR, CHÄRE, or CHÖRE, n. [Goth. kar, business or concern; A. S. cyrra, a turn.] Work done by the day; a small job; a light task.

As the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chare. Shak.

This colloquial word is spelled char in most of the English Dictionaries, and pronounced chäre; but in Richardson's it is printed chare (also chare-woman). Holloway, in his "Provincial Dictionary," writes choor and choor-woman; and Palmer, in his "Dialect of Devonshire," chüre. In the United States, it is commonly pronounced chöre. — See CHORE.

"In Ireland, they seem to have retained the genuine pronunciation of this, as well as many other old English words; I mean that which is agreeable to the orthography, and rhyming with tar. In England, it is generally heard like chair, to sit on, and its compound, char-woman, like chair-woman. Skinner, I know, admits that the word may be derived from the Dutch keeren, to sweep; and Junius spells the word chart, and tells us the Saxons have the same word spelled cyrra, signifying business or charge; but be its derivation what it will, either the orthography or the pronunciation ought to be altered; for, as it stands at present, it is a singular and disgraceful anomaly." Walker.

CHÄR, or CHÄRE, v. n. To work by the day; to do little jobs. Johnson.

CHÄR, or CHÄRE, v. a. To perform a business. "That char is chared." Ray.

† CHÄR'ÄCT, or CHÄR'ECT, n. An inscription. Skelton.

CHÄR'ÄC-TËR (kä'äk-tër), n. [Gr. χαρακτήρ, distinctive mark; χάπτω, to cut in furrows; L. character; It. carattere; Sp. caracter; Fr. caractère; Ger. character.]

1. A distinctive mark by which any thing is separated or distinguished from another.

All things have all, small and great, to have a character. Ret. xiii. 16, Wicliffe's Trans.

2. A sign used in writing or in printing; a letter of the alphabet; an emblem; a figure.

It were much to be wished that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter. Holder.

3. A letter as formed by a particular person; handwriting; chirography.

You know the character to be your brother's. Shak.

4. The assemblage of qualities which distinguish one person from another; particular constitution of the mind.

Actions, looks, words, steps, form the alphabet by which you may read character. Lavater.

Health and sickness, enjoyment and distress, riches and poverty, are all characters of the mind. Johnson.

Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity, or from barbarous corruptions; as, "Chastity of language."

Syn.—See MODESTY.

"I have in this word departed from Mr. Sheridan, and several other speakers, in the sound of the a in the first syllable, as no analogy can be clearer than that which prevails in words of this termination, where the antepenultimate accent always shortens the vowel. Thus, though the a, e, and i are long in humane, serene, and duane, they are short in humanity, serenity, and duvity; and unless custom clearly forbids, which I do not believe is the case, chastity ought certainly to have the a as I have marked it." Walker.

—"This word, like fearful, has contracted an irregular pronunciation, that seems more expressive of the turn of mind it indicates than the long open e, which languishes on the ear, and is not akin to the smartness and vivacity of the idea. We regret these irregularities, but they are not to be entirely prevented; and, as they sometimes arise from an effort of the mind to express the idea more forcibly, they should not be too studiously avoided; especially when custom has given them considerable currency, which I take to be the case with the short pronunciation of the present word. Mr. Sheridan and some other orthoepists seem to adopt the latter pronunciation, and W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry, the former, and as this is agreeable to the orthography, and it may be added, to the etymology, (which indicates that state of mind which arises from being full of good cheer,) it ought, unless the other has an evident preference in custom, to be looked upon as the most accurate." Walker.

Syn.—Cheerful denotes an unruffled flow of good spirits. A cheerful person smiles; one who is merry or mirthful laughs. Habitually cheerful; a cheerful countenance; occasionally merry or mirthful; an animated expression; a lively or sprightly manner; a willing mind; gay company; gay color or attire. — See GAYETY.

Thou sitt'st between the cherubim bright. Milton.

With golden cherubim is tufted. Shak.

Some of the rabbins tell us that the cherubims are a set of angels who know most, and the seraphims a set of angels who love most. Addison.

† "We are authorized," says Dr. Campbell, "both by use and by analogy, to say either cherubs and seraphs, according to the English idiom, or cherubim and seraphim, according to the Oriental. The former suits better the familiar, the latter the solemn, style.—As the words cherubim and seraphim are plural, the terms cherubims and seraphims are wanting the plural, are quite improper." Perrin & Hall.

Walker remarks that "those who understand no language but their own are apt to commit an unpardonable fault with critics by mistaking this word [cherubim] for a singular, and writing the plural cherubims." Yet this is the form of the plural [cherubims and seraphims] uniformly used in the common version of the Bible, in which cherubims occurs twenty-three times, and seraphims twice; and the same form is also used by good authors.

Our islanders, however they may pretend to choose one another, make but very awkward rogues. Tadler.

The following account is given by Dr. R. C. Trench of the singular origin of this word to choose, from the Turkish word chiaous, which signifies interpreter;—written by Hakluyt chaus, and by Mas-singer chaus. "Such an interpreter, being attached to the Turkish embassy in England, committed, in the year 1609, an enormous fraud on the Turkish and Persian merchants resident in London. He succeeded in cheating them of a sum amounting to four thousand pounds—a sum much greater at that day than at the present. From the vast dimensions of the fraud, and the notoriety which attended it, any one who cheated or defrauded was said to chaus, chauser, or chouse—to do, that is, as this chaus had done." See also William Gifford's Ben Jonson, iv. 27.

This word appears to have been originally derived from the Greek, through the Anglo-Saxon. The Goths on the Lower Danube, as stated by Dr. Trench, were first converted to Christianity by Greek missionaries from Constantinople, who imparted to them the word κυριακή, or κυριακόν, church; and the Goths lent the word to other German tribes, including the Anglo-Saxons. "The passage," says Dr. Trench, "is of the parentage of the word is from Walafrid Strabo (about 840), who writes thus: 'Ab ipsis autem Græcis Kyreh à Kyrios—et alia multa accepimus. Sic ut domus Dei Basilica, i. e. Regia à Rege, sic etiam Kyrica, i. e. Dominica à Domino nuncupatur.'"]

1. A building consecrated to Christian worship and ordinance.

Church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house Hooker.

2. The general or collective body of Christians. "The holy church throughout all the world." Book of Common Prayer.

The church is undoubtedly one, as the human race is one—one in reference to Him, its Creator and Father; but it is not one community on earth.

The true and grand idea of a church is a society for making men like Christ, earth the kingdom of Christ. Dr. Arnold.

3. A particular body or denomination of Christians; as, "The Episcopal Church"; "The Roman Catholic Church."

4. An assembly of Christians belonging to one place or to one society; as, "The seven churches which are in Asia." Rev. i. 4.

He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

5. Ecclesiastical authority, as distinguished from civil authority; the clergy as a body.

The same criminal may be absolved by the state, yet censured by the church. Leslie.

6. The body of communicants, in distinction from persons belonging to the same congregation, or parish, who are not communicants. [U.S.]

It is often used in composition; as, church-yard.

The invisible church is the collective body of saints, or the true disciples of Christ, in heaven and on earth.

Syn.—Church is used both for the people who worship, and a place of public worship. "The church," in the sense of a place of public worship, is limited, in England, to houses of the kind belonging to the Episcopal church, or the established religion; the houses of public worship among the dissenters being styled meeting-houses or chapels; but in this country this distinction is not generally adhered to.—"Churches would be better attended, and meeting-houses closed." *Gent. 1. The body or order of men set apart by ordination for the offices of religion, in distinction from the laity;—in England, commonly restricted to those of the established church.

The progress of ecclesiastical authority gave birth to the memorable distinction of the laity and clergy, which had been unknown to the Greeks and Romans. The former of these appellations comprehended the body of the Christian people, the latter, according to the signification of the word, was appropriated to the chosen portion, that had been set apart for the service of religion. Gibson.

2. The privilege or benefit of clergy.

If convicted of a capital offence, he [the prisoner] is entitled to a benefit of clergy, before conviction. Blackstone.

SYN.—See CLERGYMAN.

CLĒR'—GY-A-BLE, a. (Law.) Entitled to, or admitting, benefit of clergy.—See BENEFIT OF CLERGY. Blackstone.

CLĒR'—GY-MAN, n.; pl. CLERGYMEN. One of the clergy; a man in holy orders; an ordained Christian minister;—in England, commonly restricted to ministers of the established church.

SYN.—In Christian communities, the people are distinguished into clergy and laity; and the clergy comprises such persons as are regularly licensed or ordained as ministers or preachers of the gospel; yet, in England, those who preside over dissenting congregations are not styled clergymen, but ministers.

In the Episcopal Church, the clergy are divided into three general orders, bishops, priests, and deacons.—In the English establishment, there are other orders subordinate to bishops, as deans (next in rank to bishops), archdeacons; also prebendaries and canons, who are benefited clergymen connected with cathedral or collegiate churches. The pastors of parishes, or parish priests, who receive the tithes of a parish, are vicars, rectors, parsons, or curates; but curates are commonly clergymen employed by rectors, &c., to assist them, or to perform their duties.

"By the word parson," says Dr. Trusler, "is implied one of a particular class of clergy, whereas by the word clergyman is understood any person ordained to serve at the altar. Parsons are always priests; many clergymen are only deacons. Every bishop, dean, prebend, &c., is a clergyman, though not always a parson."

"A minister," says Mr. Taylor, "is one who actually or habitually serves at the altar. The clergyman who delegates his functions is not a minister. The dissenting clergy are all ministers; for as ordination with them confers no indelible character, on ceasing to officiate, they revert into laymen. A priest is one of the second order in the hierarchy, above a deacon and below a bishop; it is a title bestowed by specific ordination, which confers a privilege of consecrating the sacrament. Only priests are capable of being admitted to any parsonage, vicarage, benefice, or other ecclesiastical promotion.—Minister means servant, and therefore retains the idea of actual employ."

CLĒR'—C, n. [L. clericus; A. S. cleric, or clerc.] A clergyman. [R.] Bp. Horsley.

CLĒR'—C, a. [Gr. κληρικός; It. clericale; CLĒR'—C, Sp. & Fr. clerical.]

1. Pertaining to the clergy. "The clerical revenue." Bp. Barlow.

2. Pertaining to a clerk, or a writer; as, "A clerical error."

CLĒ-RĪG'—I-TY, n. The state or the quality of the clergy. J. J. G. Wilkinson.

CLĒR'—I-SY, n. 1. The body of learned men; the literati. Coleridge.

2. The clergy as opposed to the laity. Ec. Rev.

|| CLERK (klark or klērk) [klark, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K. Sm. R. C.; klērk, Wb.], n. [Gr. κληρικός; L. clericus; Fr. clerc.—A. S. clerc, cleric; Dut., Sw., & Dan. klerk.—See CLERGY.]

1. A clergyman; a minister.

All persons were styled clerks that served in the church of Christ. Ayliffe.

2. A man of letters; a scholar;—a writer. Formerly, clerk was the usual term for a scholar; most situations of trust or talent being filled by the clergy. Johnson.

3. A layman who reads the responses in the Church service to direct the rest of the congregation. Wheatley.

4. One employed to keep records or accounts.

or as an assistant writer in a public or private office; as, "The clerk of a legislature or of a court"; "The clerk in a merchant's counting room."

5. A subordinate or an assistant in the store or shop of a retail trader.

Clerk and sergeant are uniformly pronounced clark and sargeant by the English orthoepists. Walker says, "There is a remarkable exception to the common sound of the letter [c] in the words clerk, sergeant, and a few others, where we find the e pronounced like a in dark. But this exception, I imagine, was, till within these few years, the general rule of sounding this letter before r, followed by another consonant. The proper names Derby and Berkeley still retain the old sound, as if written Darby and Barkeley; but even these, in polite usage, are getting into the common sound, nearly as if written Durby and Burkeley. As this modern pronunciation of the e has a tendency to simplify the language by lessening the number of exceptions, it ought certainly to be indulged."

Smart says the letters "er" are irregularly sounded in clerk and sergeant, and formerly, but not now, in merchant, Derby, and several other words."

In this country, it is very common to pronounce these words clerk and sergeant, in accordance with their orthography, with the sound of e as in her and jeer.

CLERK'-ALE (-āl), n. [From clerk and ale.] The feast of the parish clerk. Warton.

CLË' THRA, n. [Gr. κλήθρα, the alder.] (Bot.) A genus of pretty, upright, North American plants with white flowers. Loudon.

CLEVE, } [A. S. clif, a rock, a cliff.] In compo-CLIF, } sition, this syllable at the beginning or CLIFF, } at the end of the name of a place, denotes it to be situated on the side of a CLIVE, } rock or a hill; as, "Cleveland, Clifton, Stancliff." Johnson.

CLËV'ER, a. [With respect to the etymology of clever, Skinner and Bailey suggest Fr. leger, light; and Johnson says, "Of no certain etymology." The following are new views of the matter.—"Derived evidently from the verb to cleave. It is curious to observe that several of the words which describe the various mental powers are derived from words signifying to split, cleave, or separate; as, science from scio, probably the same as scindo, to cut; clever from cleave; distinguish, discriminate, both signifying a dividing or sifting process, &c." English Synonyms, edited by Abp. Whately.—"It is from deliver, no doubt, that we have fabricated our modern abbreviation clever. The ancient forms for what we now call clever and cleverly were deliver and deliverly. Thus in Chaucer, the knight's son, the young squire, is described as 'wonderly deliver and grete of strengthe.'"—"Deliver, rapidly pronounced, became diver or clever, and that was inevitably converted into clever by the euphonic genius of the language, in which such a combination as dl cannot live." G. L. Craik. Notes and Queries.—Perhaps from A. S. gleaw, skilful. Bosworth says, "Otfrid uses gleawe for clever."—Scot. gley, clever.] 1. Dexterous; skilful.

The man has a clever pen, it must be owned. Addison.

2. Just; fit; proper; commodious.

He can't but think 't would sound more clever. Pope.

3. Well-shaped; handsome. "The girl was a tight clever wench." Arbutnot.

Johnson, after giving the above definitions of clever, adds, "This is a low word, scarcely ever used but in builesque or conversation, and applied to any thing a man likes, without any settled meaning." It is, however, an old word in the language, and used by the best English authors, but it is used in somewhat different senses in different parts of England. Coles (1677) defines it "neat, smooth, dexterous"; Bailey, "skilful, ingenious, neat-handed, well-shaped"; Forby, "dexterous, adroit"; and Ray, "neat, elegant."—"In either sense," says Forby, "it is so very common and general, and appears so to have been for many years, that it seems difficult to conceive how Sir Thomas Browne should have been struck with it as a provincialism, and still more how Ray, long afterwards, should have let it pass as such without any remark. A colloquial and familiar term it certainly is, but assuredly not provincial, nor even low."

The following extracts show the manner in which the word is used by good English writers:—

When a man takes it into his head to do mischief, the public has always reason to lament his being a clever fellow. Ep. Horne.

If the fellow [his infant son] turns out to be good, I shall not so much mind about his being extra clever. John Foster.
Every work of Archbishop Whately must be an object of admiration to the clever of the age. Ed. Hume.

The more clever a man is, if he is not wise, the more harm he will do, even though his intentions are good. Whately.

Bonaparte was certainly as clever a man as ever lived; but he appears to me to have wanted sense on many occasions. Duke of Wellington.

In the United States, clever, as a colloquial word, is often improperly used in the sense of good-natured, well-disposed, kind, honest; and the phrase "clever man," or "clever fellow," is employed to denote a person of good nature, good disposition, or good intention.

Syn.—Ingenious and skilful are applied to qualities of the mind, expert, dexterous, and adroit, chiefly to those of the body; clever, to those both of the body and the mind. An ingenious mechanic; a skilful physician; an expert bowman; a dexterous fencer; an adroit pickpocket; clever in business or in writing.

COM-MEND'A-BLE [kom-mend'a-bl, P. Ja. K. Sm. R. C. Wb. Bailey, Johnson, Ash, Kenrick; kom-men-da-bl, J. F.; kom-men-da-bl or kom-men-da-bl, S. W.], a. [L. commendabilis; It. commendabile.] That may be commended; laudable; worthy of praise. "Commendable quality." Addison. "Commendable undertaking." Hoadly.

Walker said, near the end of the last century, "This word, like acceptable, has, since Johnson wrote his Dictionary, shifted its accent from the second to the first syllable. The sound of the language certainly suffers by these transpositions of accent. However, when custom has once decided, we may complain, but must still acquiesce. The accent on the second syllable of this word is grown vulgar, and there needs no other reason for banishing it from polite pronunciation." But Smart (1837) remarks, "A few years ago, commendable and commendably were accented by the higher grade of speakers on the first syllable; a better taste has restored, or nearly restored, the more consistent accentuation."

Syn.—See LAUDABLE.

COM-MEND'A-BLE-NESS, n. The state of being commendable. Bp. Burnet.

CQM-PÛL'SA-TO-RY, a. Compulsory. "By terms compulsory." [R.] Shak.

CQM-PÛL'SION (kôm-pûl'shun), n. [L. compulsio; Sp. & Fr. compulsion.]
 1. The act of compelling; force; violence; constraint; coercion.

Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie
 To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.

2. The state of being compelled.

When the fleece lies hung on our broken rear,
 With what compulsion and laborious flight
 We seek thus low. Milton.

Syn.—Compulsion, coercion, and force are more active in their signification than constraint and restraint. Compulsion and coercion are never used to express the force a person exercises on himself, but only in relation to others; restraint and constraint may be applied to one's self. A government is said to use coercion, to make its subjects conform to the established religion. A traveller delivers his purse to a robber under compulsion. A person exercises constraint upon himself unwillingly; and he exercises restraint upon himself, or upon his feelings, from a sense of duty. The forms of civil society or public opinion lay a proper constraint upon the behavior of men, and make them agreeable to each other.

CQM-PÛL'SIVE, a. Having the power to compel; forcing. "A more short and compulsive method." Swift.

CQM-PÛL'SIVE-LY, ad. By force; by violence.

CQM-PÛNC'TION (kôm-pûngk'shun), n. [L. compunctio, compunctus, to prick; It. compunzione; Sp. compunction; Fr. compunction.]
 1. The act of pricking; power to irritate. "This is that acid—with such activity and compunction." Browne.
 2. Reproach of conscience; remorse; repentance; contrition; penitence.

He acknowledged his disloyalty to the king with expressions of great compunction. (Harvard).

Syn.—Compunction and remorse both express the state of a wounded conscience or a sense of guilt, but the latter is the stronger term of the two. Compunction for sin or for minor offences; remorse for enormous crimes.—See REPENTANCE.

CQM-PÛNC'TIOUS (kôm-pûngk'shus, 82), a. Implying or feeling compunction; repentant; sorrowful; penitent; contrite.

Stop up the access and passage to remorse,
 That no compunctious visitings of nature
 Shake my fell purpose. Shak.

CQM-PÛNC'TIOUS-LY, ad. With compunction; sorrowfully; contritely; penitently.

† CQM-PÛNC'TIVE, a. Causing remorse. Johnson.

† CQM-PÛPIL, n. A fellow-pupil. Walton.

It was the assurance of a resurrection that gave patience to the confessor, and courage to the martyr. Angier.

4. Dr. Kenrick says this word is sometimes, but improperly, accented on the first syllable, but it may be observed that this impropriety is become so universal that not one who has the least pretension to politeness dares to pronounce it otherwise. Mr. Sheridan and Entick have the accent on the first syllable of this word, Mr. Scott, on the first and second, Dr. Johnson, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, W. Johnston, Ash, Bailey, and Smith have the accent on the second; but with nothing to justify this weight of authority, the best usage is certainly on the other side. Walker.

CON-FESS'OR-SHIP, n. The office of a confessor. [It.] Er. Rev.

CON-FEST', p. & p. a. Confessed. Pope.

A person trusted with secrets or private affairs; a bosom friend.

Moby being a confidant of the Prior's, he may be supposed to have with him as he was directed by him. Burrill.

52. — This word, very unlike most others from the same source, has been made to alter its French or etymology, in order to approach a little nearer to the English pronunciation of it. Some affected speakers on the stage pronounce the first syllable like cone, as it is marked in the first edition of Mr. Sheridan's Dictionary; and this is perfectly of a piece with the affectation which has altered the spelling of the last. By Dryden and South, as quoted by Dr. Johnson, we find this word spelled like the adjective confident; and it is more than probable that its French pronunciation is but of late date; but so universal is its use at present, that a greater mark of rusticity cannot be given than to place the accent on the first syllable, and to pronounce the last dent instead of dant. Walker.

CÖN-FI-DÄNTE', n. [Fr. confidante.] A female friend intrusted with secrets. Hurd.

CÖN-FIDE', v. n. [L. confido, to trust in; con, with, and fido, to trust; It. confidare; Sp. confiar; Fr. confier.] [i. CONFIDED; pp. CONFIDING, CONFIDED.] To have confidence; to rely; to trust; — used with in.

He alone won't betray in whom none will confide. Congreve.

Syn. — Confide expresses more than trust. We always trust when we confide. Confide in a friend; trust to a faithful servant or a customer. A breach of trust evinces a want of integrity; a breach of confidence evinces baseness.

CÖN-FIDE', v. a. To trust; to intrust.

The only one to whom I dare confide my folly. Lyttleton.

CÖN-FI-DENCE, n. [L. confidentia; It. confidenza; Sp. confianza; Fr. confiance and confidence.] 1. Trust in moral probity; firm belief in the integrity of others.

We made confidential communications to those in whom we had no confidence, and who reposed no confidence in us. Burke.

Confidence is a plant of slow growth in an aged bosom. Lord Chatham.

2. Reliance upon one's own abilities or fortune; assurance, as opposed to timidity.

His times, being prosperous, had raised his confidence by success. Bacon.

3. Boldness; assurance; — as opposed to modesty.

But surely modesty never hurt any cause, and the confidence of man seems to me to be much like the wrath of man. Tillotson.

But Terme, which signifieth bounds, is the God of confines North.

Nature in you stands on the very verge of her confine. Shak.

"Dr. Johnson tells us that the substantive confine was formerly pronounced with the accent on the last syllable. The examples, however, which he gives us from the poets prove only that it was accented both ways." Walker.

Syn. — See BORDER.

CÖN-FINE, a. Bordering upon. [R.] Johnson.

CÖN-FINE', v. a. [It. confinare; Fr. confiner.] [i. CONFINED; pp. CONFINING, CONFINED.]

1. To shut in by some bound, limit, or restraint; to restrain; to immure; to imprison.

As broad and general as the casing air, But now I'm caged, cribbed, confined, bound in. Shak.

2. To restrict; to limit; to circumscribe.

If the gout continue, I confine myself wholly to the milk diet. Temple.

2. Communication; intercourse.

A very material part of our happiness or misery arises from the connections we have with those around us. Bihar.

3. Kindred; relative; relation; as, "Family connections."

CON- "We often hesitate whether to write connection, inflection, reflection, or connezzion, inflection, reflexion. The difference is this: connection, inflection, reflexion, &c., presumes an immediate formation from, and relationship to, the correspondent verbs, to connect, to inflect, to reflect; the other form takes us to the Latin spelling connezzio, inflectio, reflexio; or to the Anglicized words conner, inflect, reflex. The preference may safely be recommended to the first form, namely connection, &c. But observe that the word connezzion has no such word as connezz in correspondence with it, and is therefore properly written with an z." Smart. — Sullivan, however, says, "Etymology, authority, and usage declare for connection."

Both common usage and the Dictionaries favor the orthography of inflection and reflection; but in relation to connection or connezzion, the present usage is divided, though most of the English Dictionaries have the spelling connection.

Syn. — See ASSOCIATION, INTERCOURSE.

† CON-QUAN-SATE, v. a. [L. conquisso, conquisatus; con, with, and quasso, to shake.] To shake. Harvey.

† CON-QUER (kōng'ker, 82) [kōng'ker or kōng'kwer, H. Ju.; kōng'ker, Sm.], v. a. [L. conquiro, to seek; con, with, and quæro, to seek; Fr. conquérir.] 1. CONQUERED; pp. CONQUERING, CONQUERED.

1. To get possession or mastery of by physical force; to subjugate; to vanquish; to subdue; to overcome; to defeat.

If the Romans can do this by what right they can do it by the world, we never will can their strength in the world, or we can it with the name of virtue. Ed. Rev.

2. To prevail over or surmount, by a mental effort; as, "To conquer one's prejudices."

3. To gain or win by victory; as, "To conquer a peace."

— "Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Elphinstone, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Johnston, have adopted the first pronunciation [kōng'ker] of this word; but, as it is a wanton departure from our usual analogy to that of the French, and is a much harsher sound than the second [kōng'kwer], it were to be wished it could be reclaimed, but, as it is in full possession of the stage, there is but little hope of a change." Walker.

Syn. — To conquer is more general in its meaning than to vanquish. To vanquish implies a combat; to conquer, a series of combats; to subdue implies a continual pressure till opposition ceases, and to subjugate (which originally means, to bring under the yoke) is a still stronger term, implying the act of reducing to complete submission. Sullivan.

CON-QUER a country; conquer prejudices; subdue a people; subdue passions; defeat an enemy or an opponent; overcome difficulties or prepossessions; surmount obstacles.

1. † CONSCIOUSNESS; knowledge.

What supports me, dost thou ask? The conscience, that tells me I have overleapt the liberty of nature, my noble task, or which all Europe rings from side to side. Milton.

2. The faculty of judging of one's conduct with reference to some standard of right and wrong; the moral sense; moral faculty.

Conscience, according to the very notion of it, imports a double or joint knowledge, to wit, one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action. South.

What is conscience? If there be such a power, what is its office? It would seem to be simply this, to approve of our own conduct when we do what we believe to be right, and to condemn us when we do what we believe to be wrong. Ed. Rev.

That conscience pleads her cause within the breast; To nobly guide the conscience, not to oppress, and temper Not man's own passion, but his own conscience, but, first or last, it was to guide him to his end. South.

Whispered he to himself, or loud he said, Man's conscience is the guide. Ed. Rev.

3. The estimate or decision of conscience; justice; honesty; fairness.

What you require cannot, in conscience, be delivered by me. Ed. Rev.

CÖN'SUL, n.; pl. CONSULS. [L. consul; consulo, to consult; It. console, or consolo; Sp. & Fr. consul.]

1. One of the two chief magistrates of the ancient Roman republic, after the expulsion of the kings.

In the first ages of the republic, the two consuls were always chosen from patrician families; but the people obtained the privilege, A. C. C. 355, of electing one of the consuls from their own body, and some times both were plebeians. Anthony.

2. One of the three chief magistrates of France from 1799 to 1804. These were, at first, Bonaparte, Siéyès, and Ducos, and afterwards, Bonaparte, Cambacères, and Lebrun, called respectively first, second, and third consuls. Brande.

3. An officer commissioned to reside in a foreign country, chiefly for the purpose of protecting the interests of such of his fellow-citizens as have commercial relations with that country, and keeping his own government informed concerning matters of trade affecting the public welfare. To these duties are sometimes added others of a diplomatic character, in the absence of an ambassador or other political agent. Brande.

CÖN'SUL-AGE, n. A duty paid by merchants for the protection of their property in a foreign place. Smart.

CÖN'SU-LAR [kön'shu-lär, S. W. J. F.; kön'su-lär, P. E. Ja. K. Sm. G. W. B.], a. [L. consularis; It. consolare; Sp. consular; Fr. consulaire.] Relating to a consul; of the rank or authority of a consul; as, "The consular office."

†CÖN'SU-LÄ-RY, a. Relating to a consul, or to the consularship. "Consular coins." Brown.

CÖN'SUL-ÄTE, a. [L. consularis; Fr. consular.]

1. The office, function, or jurisdiction of consul; consular. "His name and consulate were effaced." Addison.

2. The dwelling or residence occupied by a consul. Ogilvie.

CÖN'SUL-GEN'ER-ÄL, n. A chief consul.

CÖN'SUL-SHÄP, n. The office or function of consul; consulate. "A kind of regal honor, the consulship." Milton.

CÖN-SÜLT', v. n. [L. consulo, consultus, or consulto; It. consultare; Sp. consultar; Fr. consulter.] [i. CONSULTED; pp. CONSULTING, CONSULTED.] To seek counsel or advice; to compare thoughts or opinions; to confer.

He sent for his bosom friends with whom he most confidently consulted. Clarendon.

CÖN-SÜLT', v. a. 1. To ask advice of, or to seek information from; as, "To consult one's friends"; "To consult a dictionary."

2. To regard; to consider; to care for. The senate owes its gratitude to Cato, Who with so great a soul consults its safety. Addison.

3. To deliberate upon; to confer about.

Many things were there consulted for the future, yet nothing was positively resolved. Clarendon.

4. To devise; to contrive.

Thou hast consulted shame to thy house by cutting off many people. Hab. ii. 10.

CÖN'SULT, or CÖN-SÜLT' (114) [kön'sult, F. Ja. K.; kön-sült, S. Sm. W. B.; kön'sult or kön-sült, W. P.], n. [It. & Sp. consulta.]

1. The act of consulting; consultation.

After short talk we then, And summons read, the great consult began. Milton.

2. A meeting for deliberation; a council.

A consult of counsellors below Was called to try him out a beau. Swift.

—"I am much mistaken if this word does not incline to the general analogy of accent in dissyllable nouns and verbs, like insult. Poets have used it both ways; but the accent on the first syllable seems the most usual, as well as the most legitimate pronunciation." Walker.

CÖN-SUL-TÄ'TION, n. [L. consultatio; It. consultazione; Sp. consultacion; Fr. consultation.]

1. The act of consulting; secret deliberation.

The chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes. Mark xv. 1.

2. A council or meeting of persons to consult together, as of physicians. "A consultation was called." Wise.

3. (Law.) A kind of writ by which the judges of the king's court, upon consultation, return a cause to an ecclesiastical court. Cowell.

Syn.—Consultations are made by two or more persons; deliberations by one or by many. Consultation to obtain information and advice; deliberation in order to avoid difficulties and dangers. When a person consults, he communicates and hears; when he deliberates, he ponders and hesitates.

CÖN-SÜLTÄ-TIVE, a. [Fr. consultatif.] Pertaining to consultation. "Who have a consultative power." Bp. Bramhall.

CÖN-SÜLT'ER, n. One who consults.

CÖN-SÜLT'ING, p. a. Giving or receiving counsel.

A consulting physician is one who consults or visits with the attending practitioner.

CÖN-SÜLTIVE, a. [It. & Sp. consultivo.] Pertaining to consultation; consultative. Goodwin.

CÖN-SUM'Ä-BLE, a. [L. consumabilis; It. consumabile; Sp. consumible.] That may be consumed. "Consumable commodities." Locke.

CÖN-SUM', v. a. [L. consumo; con, with, and sumo, to take, to spend; It. consumare; Sp. consumir; Fr. consommer.] [i. CONSUMED; pp. CONSUMING, CONSUMED.] To reduce to nothing; to exhaust; to waste; to spend; to destroy.

Where two raging fires meet together, They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shak.

Thus in soft anguish she consumes the day. Thomson.

Syn.—See SPEND.

CÖN-SÜME', v. n. To waste away.

These violent delights have violent ends, And in their triumph die; like fire and powder, Which, as they meet, consume. Shak.

CÖN-SÜM'ER, n. One who consumes. Locke.

CÖN-SÜM'ING-LY, ad. In a consuming manner. Hyst.

CÖN-SÜM'MÄTE [kön-süm-mät, W. F. J. Sm. H. C.; kön-süm-met, S. J.; kön-süm-mät, K. W. B.—See CONTEMPERATE], v. a. [L. consum- mo, consummatus; con, with, and summa, summit, perfection; Sp. consumar; Fr. consumer.] [i. CONSUMMATED; pp. CONSUMMATING, CONSUMMATED.] To reach the summit or utmost point aimed at; to complete; to perfect; to finish by doing all that was designed, to accomplish

And, to consummate all, Greatness of mind and nobility then sent Build in her love's nest. Milton.

Syn.—Plans, works, &c., are completed or finished; wishes and favorite schemes are consummated. A person may flatter himself that the completion of his plan will be the consummation of his wishes.

CÖN-SÜM'MÄTE, a. [L. consummatus; Sp. consumado.] Complete; perfect; finished.

Earth, in her rich attire Consummate, lovely, smiling. Milton.

CÖN-SÜM'MÄTE-LY, ad. Perfectly; completely. "Consummately learned in the Greek." Warton.

CÖN-SÜM'MÄTION, n. [L. consummatio; Sp. consumacion; Fr. consummation.]

1. The act of consummating; completion; finishing; perfection.

That regular process which it must be supposed to take from its original to its consummation. Addison.

'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished. Shak.

2. End of any thing, as the world.

From the first beginning of the world unto the last consummation thereof. Hooker.

3. Termination of life; death.

Quiet consummation have, And renowned be thy grave. Shak.

CÖN-SÜMPT'ION (kön-süm'shun), n. [L. consumptio, consumo, to eat up; It. consumazione; Sp. consumacion; Fr. consommation.]

1. Act of consuming; extinction; destruction.

All the parts of it [the world] decay, which should argue a wasting and ingreave consumption in the whole. Hakewell.

2. The state of being consumed; waste.

The mountains themselves have not suffered any considerable diminution or consumption. Woodward.

3. (Med.) Progressive emaciation; a gradual wasting away or decline by disease, particularly by a diseased state of the lungs; phthisis; marasmus. Dunglison.

Syn.—See DECAY.

|| CÖN-SÜMPT'IONÄ-RY, a. Relating to, or partaking of, consumption. [It.] Bp. Gauden.

|| CÖN-SÜMPT'IVE (-süm'tiv), a. 1. Destructive; wasting. "A long consumptive war." Addison.

2. Diseased with a consumption.

By an exact regimen, a consumptive person may hold out for years. Arbuthnot.

3. Pertaining to a consumption; as, "A consumptive complaint."

|| CÖN-SÜMPT'IVE-LY, ad. In a consumptive manner. Beddoes.

† CÖN-SÜ'TILE, a. [L. consutilis; con, with, and sut, to sew together; con, with or together, and sut, to sew.] Stitched together. Bailey.

† CÖN-TÄBÜ-LÄTE, v. a. [L. contabulo, contabulatus; con, with, and tabula, a board.] To floor with boards. Clayton.

CÖN'TACT, n. [L. contactus; contingit, contactus; con, with, and tango, to touch; Fr. contact.] The state of touching; touch; close union; junction; juncture; as, "To bring two bodies into contact."

Angle of contact, (Geom.) the angle made by a curve line with its tangent. Brande.—Point of contact, the point common to a curve and its tangent. Helm.

† CÖN-TÄCT'ION, n. The act of touching. Brown.

CÖN-TÄCT'IVÄ, a. Relating to, or implying, contact. "Contagion may be said to be immediate, contactual, or remote." P. Cyr.

CÖN-TÄ'GION (kön-tä'gion), n. [L. contagio; con, with, and tango, or tango, to touch; It. contagione; Sp. contagio; Fr. contagion.]

1. (Med.) The communication of disease from one person to another by contact, direct or indirect; infection. "In infection and contagion from body to body, as the plague." Hernan.

Contagion and infection are generally referred to as synonymous. Langhans.

2. Propagation of any thing evil. "The scandal and contagion of example." King Charles.
 3. Poisonous emanation; pestilence.

Will he stand out of his wholesome bed
 T'ill he feel the night? Shak.

Syn. — See CONTAGIOUS.

CON-TÁ'GIONED (kən-tá'jund), a. Infected with contagion. [R.] West. Rev.

CON-TÁ'GION-IST, n. One who believes that certain diseases, as the plague, are contagious.

CON-TÁ'GIOUS (kən-tá'jus), a. [L. contagiosus; It. & Sp. contagioso; Fr. contagieux.]

1. Capable of being transmitted by contact; caught by approach; infectious; as, "A contagious disease."

2. Pestilential; poisonous. "Foul, contagious darkness in the air." Shak.

3. Spreading from one to another.

While the rout
 Of Medes and Cassians carry to camp
 Contagious terror. Glover.

Syn. — "Contagious poisons communicate the property of producing similar poisons, the small-pox is characteristically a contagious disease. By some writers, the term contagious has been limited to diseases requiring actual contact for their communication; but contagious matter appears often transmissible by the air; hence the terms immediate and mediate contagion. Diseases propagated through the medium of the air, are generally called infectious." Brande. — Diseases which attack great numbers of people at the same time, are termed epidemic, as the influenza and the cholera. Diseases confined to particular localities are styled endemic, as the goitre and the ague; and those which originate in the affections of the atmosphere and have a resemblance to the plague, are termed pestilential. All these classes of diseases are, by Dr. Mann and some other recent authors, termed zymotic diseases.

CON-TÁ'GIOUS-LY, ad. By way of contagion.

CON-TÁ'GIOUS-NESS, n. The quality of being contagious. Mountagu.

CON-TÁIN', v. a. [L. contineo; con, with, and teneo, to hold; It. contenere; Sp. contener; Fr. contenir.] [i. CONTAINED; pp. CONTAINING, CONTAINED.]

1. To comprehend; to comprise; to include; to embrace.

The rare perfections which this book contains. Beaumont.

2. To hold within a certain space or limit; to have capacity for; to hold.

If they should be written every one, the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. John xxi. 25.

3. To restrain; to bind; to repress; to restrict.

All men should be contained in duty ever after. Spenser.
 Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves. Shak.

Syn. — See COMPREHEND.

CON-TÁIN', v. n. To live in continence: — to check or repress desire. "If they cannot contain, let them marry." 1 Cor. vii. 9.

You say the muse will not contain,
 And write you must, or break a vein. Swift.

CON-TÁIN'-ABLE, a. That can be contained. "Air containable within the cavity." Boyle.

CON-TÁIN'-ANT, n. He who, or that which, contains; container. Puileyn.

CON-TÁINED' (kən-tánd'), p. a. Held as in a vessel; comprised.

CON-TÁIN'-ER, n. He who, or that which, contains; container. Daniel.

CON-TÁIN'-ING, p. a. Holding; comprising.

CON-TÁM'-I-NA-BLE, a. [L. contaminabilis.] That may be contaminated. Craig.

CON-TÁM'-I-NATE, v. a. [L. contaminare, contaminatus; contamen, for contagium, contact; con, with, and tango, to touch; It. contaminare; Sp. contaminar; Fr. contaminer.] [i. CONTAMINATED; pp. CONTAMINATING, CONTAMINATED.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt; to taint.

Shall we now
 Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? Shak.

Syn. — To contaminate, taint, defile, pollute, and corrupt are all used in the sense of injuring purity; but contaminate and taint are not so strong as the other terms. Whatever is impure, contaminates; what is gross or vile, in the natural sense, defiles, and in the moral sense, pollutes; what is infectious, corrupts or infects; and contact with a corrupted body may taint.

CON-TÁM'-I-NATE, a. Defiled; contaminated; polluted; tainted. "That country so contaminate with innocent blood." Strype.

CON-TÁM'-I-NÁT-ED, p. a. Defiled; polluted; corrupted; tainted.

CON-TÁM'-I-NÁT-ING, p. a. Defiling; polluting; corrupting; tainting.

CON-TÁM'-I-NÁ'TION, n. [L. contaminatio; It. contaminazione; Sp. contaminación; Fr. contamination.] The act of contaminating; pollution; defilement. "Contamination with carnal concupiscence." Bp. Hall.

CON-TÁM'-I-NÁ-TIVE, a. Causing contamination. West. Rev.

CON-TÁN'-KER-OÜS, a. Vile or execrable in a high degree; venomous; perverse; — written also contanherous. [Ireland.] Bichen.

† CÖN'TECK, n. [A corruption of contest. Skin- ner.] Quarrel; contention. Spenser.

† CON-TËC'TION, n. [L. contego, contextus; con, with, and tëgo, to cover.] A covering. Browne.

† CON-TËM'-ER-ATE, v. a. [L. contemero, contemeratus; con, with, and temero, to defile.] To pollute; to defile. Bailey.

CON-TËMN' (kən-tëm'), v. a. [L. contemno; con, with, and temno, to scorn; Gr. τέμνω, to cut off; It. contemnere.] [i. CONTEMNED; pp. CONTEMNING, CONTEMNED.] To neglect, or reject, as unworthy; to despise; to slight; to scorn; to spurn; to disdain.

True fame is ever likened to our shade:
 He soonest museth her that most hath made
 To overtake her. Whoso takes his wing
 He leaves her close behind him, and she
 Is ever far ahead of him. Shak.

Syn. — To contemn is less used than its conjugate noun contempt. We do not often speak of contemning a person, but we may despise and feel contempt for persons, and contemn their actions. A haughty man often despises, and feels contempt for those beneath him. To scorn and to disdain are stronger terms than to contemn and to despise, and are not applied to persons, though their conjugate nouns are. A man may be said to treat a person with scorn or disdain, but not to scorn or disdain him, though he may scorn and disdain his actions. — See DISREGAARD.

CON-TËM'-NER (kən-tëm'ner), n. One who contemns. "All contemnners and deriders of religion." Woolton.

CON-TËM'-NING, p. a. Despising; slighting. Ash.

CON-TËM'-NING-LY, ad. With contempt or slight.

CON-TËM'-PER, v. a. [L. contempero; con, with, and tempero, to temper.] [i. CONTEMPERED; pp. CONTEMPERING, CONTEMPERED.] To moderate; to temper. "The leaves qualify and contemper the heat." [R.] Ray.

CON-TËM'-PER-A-MËNT, n. The state of being tempered; temperament. Derham.

CON-TËM'-PER-ATE, v. a. To temper. [R.] Browne.

CON-TËM'-PER-Á'TION, n. 1. The act of moderating or tempering. "The contemperation of fervor in the heart." Browne.
 2. Proportionate mixture; proportion. "Contemperations of natural humors." Hale.

CON-TËM'-PER-A-TÛRE, n. The state of being tempered; temperature. [R.] Holland.

CON-TËM'-PLÁTE [kən-tëm'plát, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. Sm. R. C.; kën'tëm-plát or kən-tëm'plát, K.; kën'tëm-plát, W. B.], v. a. [L. contempler, contemplatus; con, with, and templum, an open place for observation; It. contemplare; Sp. contemplar; Fr. contempler.] [i. CONTEMPLATED; pp. CONTEMPLATING, CONTEMPLATED.]

1. To consider with continued attention; to meditate upon; to ponder; to study; to view.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to contemplate what we have a great desire to know. Watts.

2. To purpose; to intend; to expect.

— "There is a very prevailing propensity to pronounce this word with the accent on the first syllable — a propensity which ought to be checked by every lover of the harmony of language." Walker. — A similar "propensity" extends also to the following verbs, viz.: compensate, confesate, constellate, consummate, demonstrate, despoilate, expurgate, and extirpate. With respect to all these words, Dr. Webster places the accent on the first syllable: the English orthoepists, with little variation, place it on the second syllable.

Syn. — We contemplate sensible objects, or what is present and attainable; we meditate on actions and abstract qualities, as friendship and benevolence. Contemplation on the works of creation; meditation on the ways of Providence. We contemplate what is future, and meditate respecting what is future. We contemplate what is past. When used with reference to the future, in a sense similar to intend, contemplate is more immediately followed by the action than meditate. We contemplate what we suppose is soon to take place; we meditate what is probable, but more remote. We meditate an excursion abroad, which we may some time make; we contemplate a journey into the country, which we soon intend, purpose, or expect to perform.

CON-TËM'-PLÁTE, v. n. To muse; to meditate; to ponder; to think.

Shall I not muse, and then extol myself,
 To think that I have done some good? Shak.

CON-TËM'-PLÁT-ED, p. a. Attentively considered; thought upon.

CON-TËM'-PLÁ'TION, n. [L. contemplatio; It. contemplazione; Sp. contemplacion; Fr. contemplation.] The act of contemplating; reflection; meditation; studious thought; study as opposed to action.

How now, what serious contemplation are you in? Shak.
 There is no lasting pleasure but contemplation. Burnet.
 For contemplation be, and valor, formed;
 For softness else, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.

To have in contemplation, to purpose, to intend.

Syn. — See CONTEMPLATE.

CON-TËM'-PLÁ-TIST, n. A contemplative person; a contemplator. Mitford.

CON-TËM'-PLÁ-TIVE, a. [L. contemplativus; It. & Sp. contemplativo; Fr. contemplatif.]

1. Addicted to, or employed in, meditation, thought, or study; speculative; thoughtful; studious.

My life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.

2. Having the power of thought. "The contemplative faculty of man." Ray.

CON-TËM'-PLÁ-TIVE, n. (Ecol.) A friar of the order of Mary Magdalen. Crabb.

CON-TËM'-PLÁ-TIVE-LY, ad. Thoughtfully; attentively. Hulot.

CON-TËM'-PLÁ-TIVE-NESS, n. The state of being contemplative. Ash.

CON-TËM'-PLÁ-TÛR, or CON-TËM'-PLÁ-TÛR [kən-tëm'plá-tur, S. W. P. J. E. F. Ja. K.; kën'tëm-plá-tur, E. Sm. W. B.], n. [L.] One who contemplates.

CON-TËM'-PÔ-RA-NË'I-TY, n. [Fr. contemporanéité.] Contemporariness. Bp. Hurd.

CON-TËM'-PÔ-RÁ-NE-OÜS, a. [L. contemporaneus. — See CONTEMPORARY.] Living or existing at the same time; contemporary. Arnold.

CON-TËM'-PÔ-RÁ-NE-OÜS-LY, ad. At the same time. Qu. Rev.

CON-TËM'-PÔ-RÁ-NE-OÜS-NESS, n. The state of being contemporaneous. Lyell.

CON-TËM'-PÔ-RA-RI-NESS, n. The state of being contemporary; existence at the same time. "Contemporariness of princes." Howell.

CON-TËM'-PÔ-RA-RY, a. [L. contemporario, to be contemporary; con, with, and tempus, time; It. & Sp. contemporaneo; Fr. contemporain.] Living or existing at the same point of time, or in the same age; contemporaneous.

This king [Henry VIII.] was contemporary with the greatest monarchs of Europe. Strype.

A neighboring wood, born with himself, he sees,
 And loves his old contemporary trees. Colley.

Syn. — This word is often less properly written contemporary. Dr. Bentley says, "Contemporary is a downright barbarism. For the Latins never use con for con, except before a vowel, as conquell, conterual; but before a consonant, they either retain the n, as in contemporary, constitution, or melt it into another letter, as collection, comprehension; so that the word contemporary is a word of his [Boyle's] own composition, for which the learned world will congratulate him." Diss. on Phalaris. "It will not be easy," says Mr. Todd, "to confute the reasoning of this remark, by which the just rule relating to the formation of our compound words of this class, is given; though many, indeed, affectedly write cognatal, cogapartment, and the like, as well as contemporary."

"For this reason I prefer contemporary to contemporary. The general use in words compounded with the inseparable preposition con is to retain the n before a consonant, and to expunge it before a vowel or an à mute. Thus we say condisciple, conjuncture, constant; but co-equal, co-eternal, co-incide, co-hear. I know of but one exception, which is co-partner." *Dr.

Campbell*. — "Co ought to be used only when the word with which it is joined begins with a vowel, as in coeval, co-existent, co-incident, co-operate, &c.; con, when the word begins with a consonant, as in contemporary, conjunction, &c. There is but one exception, which is co-partner." Line and Learn. — The derivatives co-partnership, co-partnership, co-partnership, co-partner, co-partners, may be added to this exception. A few other words with the prefix co, are sometimes used; as co-regent, co-defendant, co-sufferer, co-tenant, and co-truster.

"His [Disraeli's] pages are frequently defaced with vulgarisms. Of these, contemporary may be taken as an instance, which, to adopt the snarl of Dr.
Bentley, 'is a word of his own co-position, on which the learned world will congratulate him.'" Ec. Rev., March, 1852.

CON-TÈM'PO-RA-RY, n. One living at the same time with another.

From the time of Boccaccio and of Petrarch, the Italian has varied very little. The Tempo of Chaucer, their contemporary, is not to be understood without the help of an old dictionary. Dryden.

† CON-TÈM'PO-RIZE, v. a. To place in the same age; to make contemporary. Brown.

CON-TEMPT' (kon-tèmt'), n. [L. contemptus; contemno, contemptus, to despise.]
1. The act of contemning or despising; disregard; slight; disdain; scorn.

It is often more necessary to conceal contempt than resentment, the former being never forgiven, but the latter sometimes is forgot. Chastelard.

2. The state of being despised; disgrace.

The Lord of hosts hath purposed it, to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honorable of the earth. Isa. xxiii. 9.

3. (Law.) Disobedience to the rules, orders, or process of a court. Burrill.

Syn. — See CONTEMN.

CON-TEMPT'U-BIL-I-TY, n. [L. contemptibilitas.] The quality of being contemptible. "Contemptibility and vanity." [R.] Spencer.

CON-TEMPT'U-BLE (kon-tèmt'ù-bl), a. [L. contemptibilis; Sp. contemptible; Fr. contemptible.]
1. Deserving contempt; despicable; vile;
base; mean; pitiful; paltry.

No man truly knows himself but he groweth daily more contemptible in his own eyes. Taylor.

2. Despised; scorned; neglected.

There is not so contemptible a plant or animal that does not confound the most enlarged understanding. Locke.

3. † Contemptuous; scornful.

If she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man hath a contemptible spirit. Shak.

Syn. — Contemptible is not so strong a term as despicable. A person may be said to be contemptible for his vanity or weakness, and despicable for his servility and baseness. What is worthless is contemptible; what is bad or wicked is despicable and vile. A contemptible writer or a contemptible production; despicable servility or meanness; pitiful or base subterfuge;
mean artifice; paltry or vile conduct.

portion of good we possess. Cogan.

The noblest mind the best contentment has. Shak.

2. That which gives content. "All the con-tentments . . . this world can afford." Bp. Hall.

Syn. — Contentment is the absence of pain, and lies in ourselves; satisfaction is positive pleasure, and is derived from external objects; and it is less permanent than contentment. A person contented has always enough, one satisfied has received enough. Acquiescence is less than contentment; and gratification is a more lively, but less permanent, state of feeling.

CON-TÈNTS', or CON-TENTS' (115) [kon-tènts',

Old men who have loved young company, and been conversant continually with them, have been of long life. Bacon.

Ec. — "There are such considerable authorities for each of these pronunciations, as render a decision on that ground somewhat difficult. Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Bailey place the accent on the second syllable; and Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, and Entick accent the first. Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott place it on both, and consequently leave it undecided. Since authorities are so equal, and analogy so precarious, usage must be the umpire; and my observation fails me, if that which may be called the best usage does not decide in favor of the accent on the first syllable." Walker. Of the above authorities included in brackets, ten are subsequent to Walker.

CŌN-VĒR'SANT, n. A converser. [R.] Butler.

CŌN-VĒR-SĀ'TION, n. [L. conversatio; It. conversazione; Sp. conversacion; Fr. conversation.]

CÖR'N-LÄWS, n. pl. Laws passed at various times by the British legislature regulating, by duties, the importation and exportation of corn, grain, or materials for bread.

It was the early policy of the English government to forbid the exportation of grain, while its importation was freely permitted. Subsequently it was deemed better to stimulate home production by prohibiting importation, or by restricting it in such a degree as to secure to the native farmers a monopoly of the home market. But in 1845-6, the dissatisfaction with this system of restriction had become so general, that Sir Robert Peel brought forward and succeeded in carrying the act, 9 and 10 Vict. c. 22, which provided for the immediate modification of the corn laws, and for their final abolition on the 1st of February, 1849. *P. CÖR'PO-RÄ'TION, n. [L. corporatio, from corpus, a body; Sp. corporacion; Fr. corporation]. An incorporated body, or body politic, created by law, and endowed with the capacity of perpetual succession.

A corporation aggregate is composed of individuals united under a common name, and vested with the capacity of acting in several respects as an individual, particularly in granting and receiving property, and in suing and being sued. Of this description are the mayor and commonalty of a city, the head and fellows of a college, and, in England, the dean and chapter of a cathedral church. — A corporation sole consists of one person only and his successors in some particular station, who are incorporated by law in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which, in their natural persons, they could not have. In this sense, the sovereign of England is a corporation sole, as is also a bishop, and every parson and vicar. In the U. S., a minister, seized of parsonage lands in right of the parish, is held to be a sole corporation for this purpose. Burrill.

No more than ten among them were dignified with the rank of counts or companions, a title of honor, or rather of favor, which had been recently invented in the court of Constantine. Gibbon.

|| The title of count, borrowed from the later Roman empire, meaning originally companion (comes), one who had the honor of being closest companion to his leader, and the shire was now the county (comitatus), as governed by this comes. In that singular and inexplicable fortune of words, which causes some to disappear and die out under circumstances most favorable for life, others to hold their ground when all seemed against them, count has disappeared from the titles of English nobility, while earl has recovered its place; although, in evidence of the essential identity of the two titles, the wife of the earl is entitled a countess; and in further memorial of these great changes that so long came over our land, the two names shire and county equally survive as household, and in the main, interchangeable words in our mouths." Dr. Trench.

COUNT'ABLE, a. That may be numbered.

COUNT'ENANCE, n. [L. continentia, a holding in, and in late Latin the contents; contineo, contains, to contain; Fr. contenance. The allusion, according to Skinner and Richardson, is to "the keeping or composure of the features of the face."] Shak.

CRÛPT'IC, } a. [Gr. κρυπτικός, fit for hiding; L. CRÛPT'Ū-CAL, } crypticus, concealed.] Hidden; secret. "Cryptic ways of working." Gianville.

CRÛPT'Ū-CAL-LY, ad. Occultly; secretly.

CRÛPT-Q-GĀ'MĪ-Ā, n. pl. [Gr. κρυπτός, hidden, and γάμος, a marriage.] (Bot.) A class of plants having no visible means of fructification, being either destitute of flowers, or having flowers which are formed upon a plan different from that of ordinary plants, as ferns, mosses, lichens, algae, fungi, &c. P. Cyc.

CRÛPT-Q-GĀ'MĪ-AN, a. Same as CRYPTO-GAMIC.

CRÛPT-Q-GĀM'IC, } a. (Bot.) Relating to CRÛPT-Q-GĀ-MŌUS, } the cryptogamia; having the fructification concealed. Lyell.

CRÛPT-Q-GĀ-MĪST, n. One versed in that part of botany which relates to the cryptogamia. Smith.

CRÛPT-Q-GĀ-MY, n. [See CRYPTO-GAMIA.] (Bot.) A concealed fructification. Pennant.

CRÛPT-Q-RA-PHAL, a. Relating to cryptography; cryptographical. Boyle.

CRÛPT-Q-RA-PHER, n. One who writes in secret characters. Craig.

CRÛPT-Q-GRĀPH'IC, } a. Relating to cryp- CRÛPT-Q-GRĀPH'IC-CAL, } tography. Clarke.

CRÛPT-Q-RA-PHY, n. [Gr. κρυπτω, to hide, and γραφω, to write.] 1. The art of writing in secret characters; writing in cipher; polygraphy. 2. Secret characters; ciphers. Johnson.

CRÛPT-Q-QY, n. [Gr. κρυπτω, to hide, and λογος, a discourse.] Secret or enigmatical language. Johnson.

CRÛS'TAL (kris'tal), n. [Gr. κρυσταλλος, ice, rock-crystal; κρυσταίνω, to congeal; κρύος, cold; L. crystallum, and crystallus; It. cristallo; Sp. cristal; Fr. cristal. — A. S. cristulla; Dut. kristal; Ger. krystall.] 1. (Chem. & Min.) An inorganic solid body, bounded by plane surfaces symmetrically arranged, and produced by the laws of chemical affinity acting on its constituent molecules in the transition from a fluid to a solid state. Dana. If the menstruum be overcharged, the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bacon. 2. A superior kind of glass. "The cup being of fair crystal." Milton. 3. The glass which covers the face of a watch; a watch-glass. Clarke.

Iceland crystal, crystallized carbonate of lime, found in Iceland; calc spar; Iceland spar. — Rock-crystal, a pure crystal of quartz; white stone. Dana.

In its original signification, this term was applied only to crystals of quartz, which the ancient philosophers believed to be water congealed by intense cold. Dana.

CRÛS'TAL, a. 1. Consisting of crystal. "Crystal window." Shak. 2. Bright; clear; transparent; pellucid. "Crystal streams." Dryden.

CRÛS'TAL-FŌRM, a. Having the form of crystal. Craig.

CRÛS'TAL-LĪNE, or CRÛS'TAL-LĪNE (19) [kris'tal-līn or kris'tal-līn, S. W. F. K.; kris'tal-līn, J. Ja.; kris'tal-līn, Sm.], a. [Gr. κρυσταλλίνος; L. crystallinus; It. cristallino; Sp. cristallino; Fr. cristallin.] 1. Made, or consisting, of crystal. "My palace crystalline." Shak. 2. Like crystal; bright; clear; pellucid; transparent. "Crystalline sky." Milton. "Crystalline tide." Mason.

Crystalline heavens, (Ancient Astron.) two spheres imagined between the pimum mobile and the firmament in the Ptolemaic system. Maunder. — Crystalline humor, or crystalline lens, a lenticular, transparent body, situated between the vitreous and the aqueous humors of the eye, and contained in a capsule. Its use is to refract the rays of light and to serve, in combination with the other humors, to form images of objects on the retina. Lloyd.

CRÛS'TAL-LITE, n. [Gr. κρυσταλλος, rock-crystal, and λίθος, a stone.] Whinstone cooled slowly after fusion. Smart.

CRÛS'TAL-LIZ-A-BLE, a. That may be crystallized; capable of being crystallized. Hamilton.

CRÛS'TAL-LIZ-ĀTION, n. [It. cristallizzazione; Sp. cristalización; Fr. cristallisation.] 1. The process of crystallizing; congealation into crystals. It [boiled cane-juce] is poured into a cooler, where the crystallization is soon completed. Granger. 2. The mass formed by crystallizing. "All mineral crystallizations." Woodward.

CRÛS'TAL-LIZE, v. a. [i. e. CRYSTALLIZED; pp. CRYSTALLIZING, CRYSTALLIZED.] To form into crystals; to cause to form crystals. Boyle.

CRÛS'TAL-LIZE, v. n. To become changed into crystals; to assume the form of crystals. Any mineral solution will crystallize into glaucous bodies. Brown.

CRÛS'TAL-LIZED (kris'tal-līzd), p. a. Formed into crystals.

CRYS-TAL-LQ-GËN'IC, } a. Relating to crys-

CÜ-BA-TQ-RY, a. Recumbent. [R.] Bailey.

CÜ-BA-TÜRE, n. [It. cubatura; Fr. cubature. — See CUBE.] (Mensuration.) The measurement of the contents of a solid body, or the finding of a cube equal to it. Harris.

CÜB-BRIDGE-HEAD, n. (Naut.) A partition made of boards, &c., across the forecabin and half deck of a ship. Scott.

CÜB-BY-HÖLE, n. A snug, confined place; a small closet. Jennings.

CÜB-DRÄWN, a. Sucked dry by cubs. "The cub-drawn bear." Shak.

CÜBE, n. [Gr. κύβος; L. cubus; It. & Sp. cubo; Fr. cube.]
 1. (Geom.) A regular solid bounded by six equal squares. Davies & Peck.
 2. (Arith.) The product obtained by taking a number or quantity three times as a factor; — thus, the cube of 3 is $3 \times 3 \times 3 = 27$; the cube of a is $a \times a \times a = a^3$. Elknot.
Cube root, (Arith.) the number or quantity that produces a given cube by being multiplied twice into itself; as, 3 is the cube root of 27.

CÜBËB, n. [Sp. cubeba; Fr. cubèbe.] A small fruit or berry of a pungent taste and aromatic smell, growing on a vine found in China, Java, &c.; Java pepper; Piper cubeba. Brande.

CÜBE'-SPÄR, n. (Min.) An anhydrous sulphate of lime. Hamilton.

CÜ'BJC, } a. [Gr. κύβος; L. cubicus; *It. & CÜ'BJ-CAL, } Sp. cubico; Fr. cubique.] Relating to a cube; having the form or properties of a cube. ("Cubical dice." Hale. "Cubical dice." Bentley.)
Cubic equation, (Algebra) an equation in which the highest exponent of the unknown quantity, in any term, is 3. *Davies.

CÜ'BJ-CÄ, n. A very fine kind of shalloon. W. Eney.

CÜ'BJ-CAL-LY, ad. In a cubical method. More.

CÜ'BJ-CAL-NËSS, n. The state or the quality of being cubical. Clarke.

CÜ'BIT, n. [Gr. κύβητον, the elbow; L. cubitum, or cubitus; It. & Sp. cubito.]
 1. (Anat.) The forearm: — the larger bone of the arm from the elbow to the wrist; the ulna. Dunglison.
